We are pleased to present the 2017 Annual Report for the Rhode Island Community Food Bank. We appreciate your support in helping us ensure that no one in Rhode Island goes hungry.

With cuts in federal funding looming for numerous government programs, the Food Bank and its member agencies are preparing for an increase in demand for food assistance.

Each month in 2017, more than 57,000 guests visited our network of pantries and meal sites. It is impossible to imagine serving more people in the coming year without much more support from the community.

Currently, many working families are not earning enough to make ends meet, even with the government assistance they receive. If benefits like SNAP (the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program) and LIHEAP (the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program) are slashed, our clients will rely on us even more to put food on the table.

And for us to succeed, we will ask for your continued commitment. We need you to ensure that we can acquire and distribute more than 9.5 million pounds of healthy, nutritious food each year for the children, adults and seniors that we serve.

We expect difficult times ahead, but we know that our dear friends and allies will continue to help make our work possible. Thank you for continuing to support the Rhode Island Community Food Bank.

YOUR TURN

Review our Annual Report to learn about the programs you have made possible.

Share our story with others and invite them to participate.

Talk to your friends about what they can do to help.

Visit rifoodbank.org to learn how to collect food and raise funds.

OUR MISSION
To improve the quality of life for all Rhode Islanders by advancing solutions to the problem of hunger.

OUR VISION
We envision a state where no one goes hungry.
Putting Kids First

Children make up one-third (33%) of the population we serve through our network of member agencies across the state. The impact of hunger on young, developing bodies and minds is especially concerning. Without proper nutrition, kids can’t learn, play and grow into productive adults.

To help address the needs of school-aged children, the Food Bank and its member agencies have developed a number of programs in addition to traditional pantries and meal sites.

School Pantries – Currently, the Food Bank supports fourteen pantries located in schools across the state. Children, and in some cases families as well, can pick up healthy, nutritious food to take home. The school location makes it easy for parents and kids to have access to food with a “one-stop-shopping” model.

Kids Cafe – The Food Bank’s Kids Cafe program serves healthy evening meals to children at risk of hunger and provides nutrition education as part of after-school activities. Meals are prepared daily by the Food Bank’s Community Kitchen culinary job training program.

Meals4Kids – When school is out, low-income children no longer receive free and reduced-price breakfasts and lunch. The Meals4Kids program provides them with a box of nutritious food that will last for a week, helping families during vacation weeks, or with the transition between the end of the school year and the start of summer lunch programs. Boxes are distributed through community health centers and food pantries.

Eighty-seven percent of every dollar donated to the Food Bank is spent on the acquisition and distribution of healthy foods and the implementation of community-based programs. Fundraising and administrative costs are just 13 percent of our total expenses.

Over the past several years, donations of food from the food industry decreased as their inventory systems have become more efficient. As a result, the Food Bank now purchases 33% of our food supply (or 3.1 million pounds).
Help She Can Rely On

“People don’t realize what a blessing it is to have something like this,” says Angela of the food pantry at St. Thomas Catholic Church in Providence, a member agency of the Rhode Island Community Food Bank.

Angela spent most of her adulthood in Rhode Island, working in the school department for 21 years until her retirement. Today, she lives on a limited income from Social Security and struggles to support herself.

Bare Shelves - When a friend noticed that she didn’t have much food in her refrigerator, she told Angela about the St. Thomas pantry. “She said, ‘Come to St. Thomas, you just need to sign in,’” Angela recalls. “So I went with her, and they gave me enough to cover a few of my meals. I like it, it’s set up like a supermarket, you can shop for what you need.”

Angela visited the pantry often until she learned she qualified for the federal Commodity Supplemental Food Program (CSFP). Now she only visits once a month to pick up her monthly box. “It’s there for people in need. When I don’t need it, I don’t come,” she explains.

Monthly Support - Through CSFP, Angela is able to pick up a box of nutritious food that provides her with basic staples.

She likes what she receives in the box each month. “You have to be creative: I use the milk for baking, cereal, drinking sometimes. The pasta I’ll break up for chicken soup, and I’ll use the vegetables in that as well. I can make Italian dressing to go with salad. I love the fruit. And the cheese, I’ll make a sort of cheese salsa – a dip – or grilled cheese.”

Angela lives on a tight budget, and the CSFP box helps her reduce the cost of purchasing food.

“I try to manage my money. After 21 years of work, they don’t give you enough to pay rent and utilities.”

The first two weeks of the month are especially difficult for Angela, because she gets her Social Security check on the third Wednesday. “Landlords don’t like to hear that. But you have to make ends meet, so you have to be a good budgeter.”

To purchase healthy, nutritious food for the clients we serve, the Food Bank relies on the generous support of businesses, foundations, individuals and organizations who are committed to providing assistance to our neighbors in need.

FY17 Public Support & Revenue

At the food pantry at St. Thomas Church, volunteers enroll guests like Angela in the Senior Box Program. Each month, volunteers distribute boxes of nutritious food to seniors.
For many years, the Rhode Island Community Food Bank has enjoyed a wonderful relationship with Collette. The organization has provided grant funding, sponsored events and offered staff as volunteers to sort and pack donated food.

Alleviating Hunger - “Collette is proud to support the Rhode Island Community Food Bank and the important services they provide to the state of Rhode Island,” explains Collette CEO Dan Sullivan, Jr. “We are aligned with the Food Bank’s mission to alleviate hunger in the state.”

Grants and other funds are distributed through Collette Cares, the company’s philanthropic arm, which is focused on three main areas: hunger, homelessness and education. Teams of employees participate in the decision-making process and follow the progress of the projects they support.

As Lynne Kelly, Community Relations Manager, explains,

“Giving back is in our fabric here. It’s an important part of our culture. There are many opportunities to be involved.”

Employees Pitch In - Collette’s presence is especially felt on Founders Day each July when employees descend upon the Food Bank to help get food ready for distribution to the many agencies across the state that directly serve clients in need of food assistance.

Lynne explains, “Our employees love being engaged as volunteers to help with these initiatives. It really gives them a great sense of pride in their work. And we’re glad to facilitate that experience for them.”

In particular, the staff at Collette are impressed by the level of accountability they see at the Food Bank, “We see the impact through the number of people served or the amount of food distributed and that always amazes us.”

We’re grateful that our friends at Collette are willing to take a break from traveling the world to head down the road to the Food Bank and help Rhode Islanders in need.
Getting Food In and Out

The Food Bank distributed 9.5 million pounds of food through its network of member agencies.

We acquire this supply from a variety of sources including the food industry - growers, retailers, wholesalers and manufacturers as well as donations from individuals and businesses in the community. (See pie chart for details)

Still, donated food is not enough to meet the high demand and the Food Bank must purchase one-third (33%) of the food that we distribute. One advantage of buying food ourselves is that we can select healthy, nutritious foods that are often not found in the donation stream.

The Food Bank is committed to providing healthy food and 88% of what we distribute is considered “core” food because it can be used to prepare a nutritious meal. Examples of core foods include brown rice, cereal, fresh and canned fruits and vegetables, pastas and sauce, canned soups and stews, peanut butter and tuna.

It’s our priority to ensure that the 155 member agencies in our network receive the food they need to serve their guests. They are able to order their food through our convenient online shopping system and nearly 70% of this food is delivered by our fleet of eight vehicles.

FRESH PRODUCE FOR ALL

At the Food Bank, we’re committed to making fresh produce available to guests at our food pantries and meal sites. We work closely with local farms and national distributors for opportunities to acquire more fruits and vegetables at a low cost.

Last year, the Food Bank distributed 2,300,000 pounds of fresh produce. That’s 23% of all food distributed. We acquire 1,707,360 pounds from distributors while local farm businesses contribute 372,603 pounds of fresh produce.

We’re also fortunate to reap the benefits of four volunteer-run community farms that produced 60,000 pounds of fresh, local produce last year. Many of them deliver this food directly to pantries and meal sites while others get it to the Food Bank so we can distribute it throughout the state.

It’s a lot of work and some dirty hands but it helps ensure that everyone has access to fresh produce.
Food Is Our Mission

For more than seventy years, Blount Fine Foods has taken great pride in delivering delicious soup to consumers at a great price. But they’re also committed to giving back to the community where they work and live.

Last year, Blount donated nearly 120,000 pounds of food to the Rhode Island Community Food Bank, making them one of the largest food industry donors. In addition, the folks at Blount have participated in our annual Empty Bowls fundraiser, serving their soup to our guests.

Blount’s CEO and President Todd Blount explained the company’s philosophy toward giving back:

“Food insecurity is an issue that’s easy for us to address. It’s in our DNA. We’re all about food. We’re all about community. We want to be part of something with meaning.”

Blount Fine Foods gives back in a number of ways, what Todd calls their Hierarchy of Giving.

- Feeding the Hungry – They regularly donate soups to meal sites like the Providence Rescue Mission and the Fall River Soup Kitchen.
- Fundraising – They provide soups for nonprofit organizations to serve or sell at their events. Blount Organics participated in the Food Bank’s Empty Bowls fundraiser for the last two years.
- Donating Funds – They will offer support to organizations through sponsorships and other giving opportunities.

On a larger scale, Blount regularly donates cases of their product to the Rhode Island Community Food Bank and the Greater Boston Food Bank for distribution throughout both states.

“It’s important that we are engaged in the community. We need to work together to solve issues [like hunger]. Our employees also take great pride in knowing that they are part of the solution.”

Todd hopes that Blount’s corporate philanthropy will spur individual employees to take advantage of volunteer opportunities.

“We want our employees to feel more connected, so it’s not just about moving boxes and pallets. We want people to want to work here.”

And it’s just the beginning at Blount. In the near future, they plan to formalize employee volunteer programs and have staff more involved in determining giving priorities for the company.

“It’s a huge area of growth for us and we look forward to getting more staff involved so we can have an even greater impact.”
Programs to Empower

CULINARY JOB TRAINING AND WORK READINESS

For nearly twenty years, the Community Kitchen program at the Rhode Island Community Food Bank has prepared low-income and unemployed adults for careers in the food industry.

Led by two professional chefs, students learn the art of cooking while preparing themselves for the competitive job market. Over 80% of graduating students secure full-time employment in the food industry.

The fourteen-week program is free for qualified candidates. Participants learn a wide range of skills like knife handling, food safety – including ServSafe certification – resume writing, job interviewing and even personal financial management.

Thirteen students are enrolled in each session where they learn in the classroom, in an industrial kitchen and at on-the-job-training sites. The nutritious meals they prepare at the Food Bank are distributed to kids at after-school program sites.

On-the-Job Training Sites – Rhode Island is known for its fine culinary establishments and many of those sites support the Rhode Island Community Food Bank’s Community Kitchen job training program by hosting students so they can learn practical kitchen skills while participating. Here is a list of sites that participated last year:

- Cranston: Chapel Grille, T’s Restaurant, Texas Roadhouse
- East Greenwich: Dave’s Marketplace
- East Providence: Tockwotton on the Waterfront
- Lincoln: Eurest Dining at Amica/Compass USA
- Newport: Tom’s Market & Deli Catering
- Providence: Blue Cross & Blue Shield of RI, Bluefin Grille (Providence Marriott), Capital Grille
- Providence Continued: Crossroads RI, Easy Entertaining, Eurest Dining at Hasbro, Inc./Compass USA, Fireworks Catering, Hemenway’s Seafood Grill & Oyster Bar, IGT, LaSalle Bakery, Los Andes, Mill’s Tavern, Old Canteen, Pranzi Catering & Events, Renaissance Providence Hotel, Rhode Island Hospital, Rhode Island School of Design, Saint Elizabeth Court

COMMUNITY COOKING

Providing healthy, nutritious food to guests at our member agencies is a top priority at the Rhode Island Community Food Bank. Eating well helps keep people healthy and productive.

Through our Community Cooking nutrition education program, we teach guests and staff how to prepare healthy meals on a budget, based on the food that is available at our network of pantries.

Classes are designed in six-week sessions and workshops are fun, informative and engaging. At the end of the sessions, participants are given the ingredients from class so they can try it at home. There are also curriculums designed for older adults and for children.

Demand for the classes is high, as people become more aware of the need to eat well to stay healthy and look for inexpensive ways to prepare nutritious meals.
“Centers like this should have more help so they can help more people in need like me.”

Andrelisa came to Providence with her daughter to start fresh after her marriage ended. Her cousin had a place where she could stay until she could manage to support herself.

Two years later, she still struggles to find a way to make ends meet. At forty-three, she is a single mom caring for a twelve-year old daughter living on the unpredictable income she earns as a hair stylist.

She says, “I don’t make that much money, but it’s enough so that I can’t qualify for assistance. And raising a young daughter on my own is very expensive.”

Serving the Community – After settling into her new neighborhood, she learned about the food pantry at the Elmwood Community Center, a program of the Community Action Partnership of Providence, one of the 155 member agencies of the Rhode Island Community Food Bank throughout the state.

The pantry serves more than six hundred residents in the 02907 zip code of Providence, a neighborhood with a majority of low-income residents and a high child poverty rate.

“When I went to the pantry for the first time, they gave me food right away. Then they told me I qualify to come back every 15 days to pick up food for me and my daughter.”

As Jailine Ortiz, Food Pantry Coordinator explains, “Everyone receives emergency food assistance the first time they come to the pantry. Then we look at their income and family size to determine how often they can visit and how much food they can receive.”

Food and Much More – Andrelisa appreciates what she receives from the pantry. “Everything is good and I use it all: rice, cereal, beans – anything that is canned that I can keep on my shelf.”

In addition to food assistance, she takes classes, participates in fitness activities and volunteers to give back to the place that has helped her so much.

“I really appreciate everything they do for me, my daughter and the community. Centers like this should have more help so they can help more people in need like me.”
Edwin and Margaret Boger embody the word philanthropy — a love of mankind. As youngsters growing up, caring for others was instilled in them through their involvement at church.

“We were taught to have care and concern about the homeless the hungry, widows, orphans,” said Margaret. “That basic belief led us to feel we have a responsibility to those who are less fortunate. We try to do what God would want us to do.”

Married for 56 years, Edwin and Margaret have spent a lifetime in the service of others. He was a biology professor, and she was a nurse. Both are now retired. They first got involved through a meal site in Providence that was supplied by the Food Bank, helping out every Saturday to prepare food for the guests. Margaret is more of a people person, so she was out front getting to know the clients, while Edwin was back in the kitchen stirring the giant pots of soup.

The Cereal Man – If that weren’t enough, Ed used to shop for cereal every Saturday, which he would deliver to women’s shelters. “I was known as the cereal man,” he quipped. He ran a bread ministry at their church for years, picking up bread from a local market and delivering it to food pantries around Providence. He bought 20 pound bags of rice to give to the Liberian immigrants at their church.

“Ed is the one with the most generous heart,” said Margaret, still with stars in her eyes after 56 years. “He’s still teaching me. It’s very hard for Ed to ever say no when he learns of a need. He is a phenomenal human being.”

Supporting Their Beliefs – In addition to volunteering their time, Ed and Margaret contribute financially to the Food Bank. On milestone birthdays and anniversaries, they’ve requested donations to the Food Bank instead of gifts for themselves. And several years ago, they let us know that we are in their estate plan.

“We have always appreciated the Food Bank because it’s such a champion of the hungry and underprivileged,” said Margaret. “We read every word of the newsletters from the Food Bank. We feel very informed.”

“We’re grateful for each day we have, and we continue to support the things we think are important,” said Ed. “We love the feeling of sharing with others. We’re blessed—we can do it, so we’re glad to do it.”

Ed was featured in The Providence Journal for volunteering at the Church of the Epiphany soup kitchen on Potters Avenue in Providence.

It’s easy to provide support to the Food Bank through your will or estate plan. To find out how, contact our Director of Philanthropy, Karen Fuller, at 401-230-1676 or kfuller@rifoodbank.org.

Winter
The pledge-drive pros at RI Public Radio raised $15,000 before 11:30 AM, helping the Food Bank secure a matching grant of $10,000 from the Rhode Island Foundation and a further $5,000 match from an anonymous donor.

Rhode Island’s letter carriers collected 60,000 pounds of food across the state as part of their 25th Annual Stamp Out Hunger food drive.

In summer time, donations lag, but the need for food isn’t any less! The Summer Food Drive reminded Rhode Islanders that hunger never takes a vacation.

At the biggest Truck Stop yet, 700 attendees enjoyed food from dozens of Rhode Island’s most beloved food trucks in the Food Bank parking lot. The event, sponsored by Stop & Shop and held in partnership with Eat Drink RI, raised nearly $160,000.

The Food Bank’s Agency Services team brought together member agencies to compare best practices and recognize outstanding efforts to serve neighbors in need.

The Summer Food Drive reminded Rhode Islanders that hunger never takes a vacation.
Over the past year, the Rhode Island Community Food Bank served 57,000 people in need of food assistance each month through our statewide network of 155 member agencies. This map shows the number of member agencies located in the cities and towns we serve as of June 30, 2017. These agencies include food pantries, meal programs, shelters, transitional housing, group homes, senior centers, day care and after-school programs.
